The Crystal Gems Warp to Bright Moon

by lefemmerouge

Summary

The Crystal Gems are recovering from their fight on Homeworld and just want to relax. They were not expecting to be caught up in an adventure and be warped to a new, unfamiliar world where they meet magical princesses and their compatriots...

Notes

All mentions of Peridot, apart from the first mention, have been changed to Peri. A revised/updated version of this fic has been posted on Squidge World entitled "The Crystal Gems "Accidentally" Warp to Bright Moon." The updates made there, made in 2024, have been added here, overwriting the original version. I have retained the original tags, summary, description, end notes, and other elements.

Comments are welcome and appreciated.

After their ordeal on Homeworld, Pearl, Amethyst, Steven, Lapis, Peridot "Peri", Connie, and Garnet were ready to collapse and rest. Convincing Blue, Yellow, and White Diamond, a set of Gem rulers, who could be termed "intergalactic imperialists", or "dictators" (as Steven had called them), to heal the corrupted gems and change their entire system of governance had a heavy emotional and physical toll.

They planned a short trip to a surprise part of the planet for well-deserved relaxation using Lion, a black-eyed and pink furred mammal with a light-pink mane and a magenta-brown nose, who had been resurrected by Steven's mom, Rose Quartz/Pink Diamond, just like Steven accidentally did for Lars that one time. Bismuth and the other un-corrupted gems would stay in Beach City to protect the Earth from any possible threats.

Each of the Crystal Gems was unique in their own way. Steven was a stocky 14-year-old boy with black eyes and curly dark hair. He wore a salmon-pink-colored T-shirt with a gold star in the center, cuffed blue jeans, and sandals which were the same color as his shirt. One of his guardians, if you could call her that, Amethyst, was different. Close to Steven's height, with bright lilact skin and dark indigo eyes, Amethyst had messy pale lavender hair that flowed down to her ankles. A large bang obscured her left eye. Her black tank top had opening in the chest, showing off her gemstone. To complete her look, she wore dark mauve shorts with black stars and white-colored boots.

In contrast, Garnet, a fusion of Ruby and Sapphire, another one of his guardians, with purplish-red skin, had three eyes. One, on the right, was colored medium ruby-red. Another, on the left was medium sapphire blue. The final one in the center was reddish violet. All three were covered by a half-star-shaped orange visor. Atop her head was a deep violet cube-shaped afro. Her gemstones were embedded in her palms. The final one of his guardians, Pearl, had a different physique from Steven, Amethyst, and Garnet. She was a slender Gem with ivory-skin, sky-blue eyes, peach-colored hair, and a pointed nose. She wore a cyan poofy blazer, with a yellow star on the back, covering a teal-blue top piece, indigo leggings, and light pink ballet flats. Her gemstone, which had its own form of internal organization, sat in the middle of her forehead.

There were a few other members of the Crystal Gems who were glad to join them in this quest for relaxation. One of them was Lapis Lazuli, a slim figure about Pearl's height. She had cyan skin, cobalt blue-colored hair at chin-length, with long bangs and a fringe covering her forehead. Her royal blue eyes, and a water droplet-shaped gemstone in her back, where her dark-blue water wings could emerge, stood out. She wore a blue-shaded backless halter crop tank top, dark blue puffy pants tied up with a bronze-gold ribbon, and sandals of a matching color.

By her side, as a loyal friend, was Peri, a lime-green skinned gem about as tall as Ruby or Sapphire, and only slightly above Steven's height. She had pale chartreuse hair in the shape of a tetrahedron, an inverted-triangle gemstone in her forehead, and a butterfly-shaped yellow-colored visor. Completing her look was bright-green leggings with dark green stars on the knees, and pale chartreuse boots.

Connie was Steven's friend and one of the members of the temporary "New Crystal Gems," or the "New Crystal Temps" as she had called it, with Lapis, Peri, and Pumpkin. She stayed by by Steven's side, as a good and loyal friend, coming along on this quest, wherever it took them. A slim 13-year-old girl, her dark brown skin shown in the light, standing out as much as her black eyes, and dark brown puffy hair which was in a chin-length bob with bangs. Her look was completed with a stylish dress and her father's pale brown jacket.

While the Crystal Gems planned on staying Earthbound, Lion had other plans. He readied himself to warp them to another dimension, not far away, in some ways, from Earth. Steven told him, directly, "Lion, warp us out of here!" Soon, all seven of them were being warped by Lion, whose eyes and mane emitted a white glow. He knew of something they didn't: the Panama Wormhole. It could only be accessed by beings like himself. Legends said it led to a planet named Etheria, a place without stars. Although these stories were often derided as a cruel joke, these stories were completely true.

Once they had reached the Panama Wormhole, which started on the Moon, he let the wormhole warp complete its magic rather than using up his own energy. This had been implanted in his mind, but while he wasn't aware of that, he went along or the ride. Steven realized something wasn't right: the warp was taking much longer than he had expected, but he couldn't do much of anything. They screamed and landed on the floor with a thud.

They were in Bright Moon, one of Etheria's many kingdoms, and center of the Rebellion, although they did not know this at the time. This magical world shared almost nothing in common with Earth. While the Crystal Gems had gemstones, the princesses they were about to meet, had elemental runestones tied to the planet itself. It grounded them there, limiting their ability to travel to other dimensions.

Looking at Garnet, Steven, Connie, Lapis, Pearl, Amethyst, and Peri were the members of the Princess Alliance. Like they did every week, they were discussing their next move against the Horde, as part of their war council, and checking in on their progress. Glimmer, Adora, Bow, Netossa, Spinnerella, Mermista, Frosta, Sea Hawk, Perfuma, and Swift Wind looked at the Crystal Gems with astonishment.

Frosta wanted to freeze them, Netossa readied her net to capture them, and Glimmer readied her magic to confuse them with her ability to distort light just like she had done with Adora when they first met. Luckily for the Crystal Gems, Perfuma felt differently. "Let us accept these unexpected visitors with open hearts. With love and understanding, we can solve anything. Let's all form a drum circle and hold hands, making love, not conflict."

While the other princesses shook their heads in what seemed like "hippy-logic" to them, Steven nodded. He would have said something similar. As such, Perfuma had, without knowing it, acted like "the Steven" something that Peri had dubbed Connie in the past. Smiling, he introduced himself, explaining they had been brought to Bright Moon by accident. He told them how, as the Crystal Gems, they worked to defend Earth from evil attacks. Queen Angella, at the head of the table, with Castaspella beside her, considered this. In a welcoming tone, she began. "Very well, Crystal Gems, as you call yourself, you are our guests in this Bright Moon castle."

She paused and continued, surprising everyone. "As prisoners!"

They were quickly escorted out of the room, into a separate area of the castle. They had little time to process this shocking turn of events and fight back against her brazen declaration. Angella tasked Adora, Bow, and Glimmer with the interrogation of these people who called themselves the "Crystal Gems."

Adora asked them what they knew. Glimmer threatened them with her magic. Bow readied his bow and arrows, including a sonic arrow and an arrow with a grappling hook. No one wanted to answer them. Steven stepped forward. "Don't do this. We just want to go home and came here by accident. We don't want to cause you any trouble."

Bow, taken in by this sympathy, realized the Crystal Gems didn't want conflict. However, Adora and Glimmer were not convinced. Seeing the Gems as a threat, the cry of "For the Honor of Greyskull!" echoed across the room. Like she had time and time again in the past, Adora transformed into an eight-foot-tall warrior named She-Ra. The Crystal Gems were ready for anything Adora or Glimmer would throw at them.

Adora went on the attack with the Sword of Protection. Energy blasts were fired across the room, most of which Steven blocked with his shield. Other blasts hit the wall behind the Crystal Gems. Garnet fought back, able to block the sword's blows with her gauntlets, with Pearl at her side, using her pearlescent spear to jab at Adora. Amethyst, easily tied up Glimmer with her whip, so she couldn't attack them with magic. Lapis used her ability to control water to throw Glimmer against the hard stone wall, making her dizzy with confusion. Peri, with her power of levitation, ferrokinesis to be precise, trapped Bow under his metallic bow, moving him up the ceiling, where she held him. Connie joined in, fighting beside Pearl and Garnet. They thrust their weapons at She-Ra, overwhelming the eight-foot-tall warrior.

While the Crystal Gems were clearly winning, the fact they had this fight at all dismayed Steven. His loud, and commanding, voice, resonated across the room. "Everyone, stop fighting! This isn't right! We need to understand and accept one another, not try and hurt each other. Let's be friends."

The other Crystal Gems listened. They withdrew and put away their weapons. Bow was gently let down to the floor by Peri. Amethyst released Glimmer from the grip of of her whip. Adora putting away her magic sword, reverting out of the She-Ra form. Connie put her sword, which came with a golden pommel, purple hilt, and a gold star emblem at the base of the crystalline pink blade, into its scabbard. Lapis, of all people, tried to lighten the mood.

"You all have...unique fighting skills...but no wonder you haven't defeated the Horde...you are no crack security team." She echoed Glimmer's description of herself and Bow after they captured Adora, then a Force Captain for the Horde.

Even though she often didn't trust strangers when she met them, Lapis's true personality was extremely laid back, despite what you might believe at first glance. Letting out a snort, then a laugh, she joked that their fighting skills would be better on the dance floor than on a battlefield.

Everyone came together and hugged each other. They weren't enemies. They were potential friends who could work together. After all, if Adora, Glimmer, and Bow could be friends, why couldn't the Crystal Gems be friends with them and vice versa? Adora and Glimmer were still skeptical of the new visitors but had calmed down. Adora came forward, apologizing for fighting them, blaming her repressed rage and emotional trauma, and asked the Crystal Gems if they could help the princesses defeat the Horde. Each of the Crystal Gems nodded in agreement.

Steven showed them his bubble, spiked bubble, and told them about his healing powers through his magic spit. Glimmer grimaced. "Ew! That's weird, but disgusting." More interesting than Steven's magic healing spit was Garnet's future vision, as she saw a possible benefit to the Rebellion. Amethyst, Pearl, Lapis, Peri, Connie, and Garnet passed at the opportunity to show their abilities, recalling they had already shown what they were made of in the previous scuffle.

Glimmer smiled. "So...interesting! We should show you the rest of the princesses!"

Peri chuckled. These princesses were nothing like the gems they had encountered and less powerful than the Diamond overlords on Homeworld by leaps and bounds. She told them this much, almost jeering them. "Princesses? The Diamonds would reduce you all to dust. Maybe the other princesses are more impressive than...the three of you."

Bow ignored this comment as he wasn't a princess. Adora and Glimmer, who were princesses, were clearly peeved by this comment. They glowered. Even so, they led the gems through the castle's halls. But... they didn't get far. They were soon stopped by an infuriated Angella. "What are you doing with these prisoners? You are supposed to be interrogating them!"

Adora whispered in Angela's ear, telling her that the Crystal Gems were not their enemies but only wanted to help. Of course, she was still skeptical. She promised to keep an eye on them. Angella sighed. "Very well, Adora, if you think of them that way, then they can meet the other princesses...again...and under better circumstances than before. I won't interfere this time."

Everyone had someone to talk to. Connie and Steven talked to Perfuma about her ability to control plants, flowers, and nature, while Garnet chatted with Netossa and Spinnerella about her fusion, consisting of two gems who loved each other (Ruby and Sapphire), intriguing them. Pearl turned to Adora, praising her for her fighting skills, showing her methods to fend off the enemy, and offered to teach her better sword fighting techniques, where she would award "Pearl points" for punctuality, perseverance, and positivity. Adora chuckled at the suggestion but acknowledged she would consider the offer.

Amethyst laughed with Glimmer about their powers, interested when Glimmer explained her ability to teleport and control light. Each one praised each other's appearance, even their hairstyles. Predictably, Peri jested Bow about their respective technology abilities. Even Lion and Swift Wind were getting better acquainted with each other. Of all the gems, Lapis stole the show. When she brought out her water wings, the princesses peered with curiosity. Adora, Glimmer, and Bow were especially amazed, looking at her adoringly. Lapis blushed not from their adoring looks, but when Bow praised her for her beautiful, majestic wings. This impressed Mermista.

"Ugh, I wish I had wings like that! The ability to fly would make my job, like, so much easier. Controlling water and having a trident is great and all, but water wings are...AMAZING!"

Lapis showed her ability to freeze water, able to manipulate the state of water itself. Neither Mermista nor Frosta could move water around as flawlessly as her. Frosta looked upward, clearly slack-jawed.

After a quick chat, many of the princesses said their goodbyes, while Adora, Glimmer, and Bow remained with the Crystal Gems. They continued to walk around the castle, with Adora and Glimmer showing them their bedrooms, a sign they were more comfortable about these visitors than before. The Crystal Gems were surprised by the beauty within their rooms. The orderliness and tidiness of Adora's room, especially the symmetry and organization, impressed a bug-eyed Pearl. This love for organization was appreciated by Adora, who tried to follow rules and stick to plans, apart from her life decision to leave the Horde and join the Rebellion many months before.

Similarly, Pearl, who often had low self-esteem, thinking she had little power to influence others and felt weak compared to the other gems, saw a kindred soul in Adora. She seemed to feel the same way about organization that she did. Although they were not the same age and had different upbringings, clearly something between Pearl and Adora clicked, a spark of friendship. They continued to chat with one another about organization, planning, and sword fighting.

In the same room, Bow and Peri talked about technology. He showed her the tracker pad he had created. While she remained gracious, she chuckled. Such technology seemed primitive to her. Her tablet, in her opinion, had much more power. "I've built robots and helped engineer a drill which reached the center of the Earth to stop a cluster of gems from destroying the planet. And...you could only, with your touch stumps, build this?"

Bow, annoyed and hurt she had described his work that way, calmed himself down so her arrogant, bragging and slightly condescending attitude wouldn't affect him. He admitted that while he didn't know everything about technology, he served as the tech master for the Rebellion, since Entrapta, a princess with a brilliant and technical mind, and adept at creating new technology, had defected to the Horde.

"I still miss her every day and am inspired by her technological mindset to tinker with technology as part of the planet's maker community. Someday, I'd like to introduce you to her, but I'm not going to the awful Fright Zone anytime soon. Last time, the Horde held me in a prison cell after kidnapping me. It was awful. I have to thank..."

Peri cut him off and looked at the recorder sitting on a nearby table. "You have one of these too! Wow, I never thought I'd see one of these again. Do you record your intimate thoughts and observations on this...thing?"

She played back one of the entries. "Future Bow, Mara...Serenia...I don't know what this message means." Interjecting, she asked Bow if she could record something using the device and he consented.

"Log date 7 24 19. Today, I was transported to this planet which has many unique properties which I would like to explore, meeting a group of elemental princesses and one person with a tanned complexion, kinky dark-brown hair, and dark black eyes. This being calls itself 'Bow' and says it is a tech master on this planet. Clearly, this...bring is knowledgeable about technology, which I did not expect from these creatures. There's not one clod among them. I would never much like to learn more from this person that calls itself Bow..."

Bow chuckled. He added to the recording. "Today, I met a short light-green skinned being named 'Peridot'. I hope to learn from her about new technologies from another dimension. It's so exciting!"

Peri understood. She spoke one more time. "End entry. Facet-2F5L out." They both embraced each other and continued talking. Lapis, Steven, Garnet, Connie, and Amethyst walked into a different room.

These other Crystal Gems didn't really know where to fit in, as they had not struck up conversations on their own. While Glimmer had a friendly demeanor, she didn't really share much in common with any of these other Crystal Gems, except for Amethyst. They had talked a little. She explained, earlier, that Angella was her mother, who grounded her when she disobeyed her. Amethyst, who loved to joke around and do pranks, had an idea. Slipping outside the door, unseen, she shapeshifted into Angella. Glimmer heard a knock on her bedroom door and quickly opened it. Amethyst walked in, with her appearance mimicking Angella. "Glimmer...you shouldn't have invited these gems into your room. I told you to watch them closely, not bring them here! You disobeyed me once again and are grounded for ONE MONTH for this transgression."

Glimmer huffed, thinking her mother stood before her. "You never listen to me...or let me do what I want! Why do you have to be so stubborn!"

As it got serious for a moment, Steven walked in behind her. He sternly addressed Amethyst. "Come on, Amethyst." He paused. "Stop that."

Amethyst transformed back to her usual form. "Man, it was supposed to be a surprise, Steven! Why did you have to ruin it!"

She let out a great howl of laughter. Glimmer didn't fully understand what had happened, except that she had been pranked. It was first time she had experienced it because princesses could not shapeshift. Despite the prank, Amethyst tried to understand Glimmer's feelings, even though they had only known each other for a short time. She tried to cheer her up by shapeshifting, which Glimmer thoroughly enjoyed, showing her effort was a success.

Perhaps, they could both share a love for eating food, although she doubted Glimmer felt the same way about eating and wasn't sure if Glimmer acted impulsively. She didn't know that Glimmer had often been impulsive, the primary reason she had been grounded by her mother in the past. Glimmer and Amethyst continued to talk, with the other Gems excusing themselves, as they didn't know what to say or what to do next.

The castle felt peaceful and the surroundings were serene, but they felt out of place, unlike Pearl, Peri, and Amethyst, each of whom had started conversations with Adora, Glimmer, and Bow. They began walking around Bright Moon, observing the landscape, buildings, and everything else, including the kingdom's magical nature. Angella saw them and asked if they wanted a castle tour, with her acting as a guide, telling the history of their people and struggle against evil. This sounded fun and exciting, better than walking around the kingdom and sightseeing. Connie, the most enthusiastic, ecstatically spoke to Angella. "I love history! I'd be honored to go on a tour of this castle with you, ma'am."

Steven nodded in agreement. Angella was glad to hear such sentiments. She was more than happy to talk about her people. "I'm relieved that you would love to learn about our wonderful history and I'd be glad to tell you about it! Follow me into the depths of knowledge! History isn't just one event, but it's an experience everyone can enjoy."

Lapis and Garnet were not as eager about this proposition. But they went along since a history tour outranked, in their minds, aimlessly wandering around the magical kingdom. So, they tagged along for the ride.

As they walked toward the castle, Angella explained the importance of the massive and opalescent moonstone, which glowed a blue-white color, which hovered over one of the castle's spires near the castle. "This runestone is the source of my powers, and those of my daughter, who both have the power of light. It can be, in extreme emergencies, used to protect this castle against attack, but that is not its ideal role."

Steven and Connie listened intently. Lapis and Garnet were blithe, indifferent to her stories. As they walked into the castle and through the hallways, she showed them a bas-relief telling the story of her people and husband, King Micah, who died at the Horde's hands. "I think of my husband almost every day because I...ordered the battle where he died. But, I have, in some ways, forgiven myself because if I had died in his place, this kingdom would not be any better off."

She then shifted to the discussion of the Battle of Bright Moon, only a few months before, with Swift Wind, Bow, Glimmer, Adora, Netossa, Spinnerella, and herself defending the castle from the Horde's attack with the Whispering Woods freezing over. "It looked as if we were going to lose, and this castle would be destroyed, but in the nick of time, Princesses Frosta, Perfuma, and Mermista came to our aid, with friends like Sea Hawk. With their assistance, the castle only sustained minor damage. We dealt the Horde their biggest defeat to date, apart from various skirmishes."

Luckily for Bright Moon, since that battle, the Whispering Woods had regrown, making it harder, than ever, for the Horde to retake Bright Moon, especially with a strong and united Princess Alliance.

On the last part of their tour, Angella showed them her private library, with books and materials of all sizes and shapes. Glimmer had never seen them herself because she didn't care much for such intellectual pursuits, unlike Adora or perhaps Bow. Steven and Connie, thinking back to the Buddy Buddwick Library in Beach City they had visited and where Steven found the wonderful journal of Buddy Buddwick, the first mate on the ship that founded Beach City, loved this most of all. Lapis and Garnet, on the other hand, who were not against libraries, or books, were not in the mood for such intellectualism at this time of day. Angella explained the importance of her library, which she had curated herself.

"These books mean so much to me personally. Some are diaries written by this planet's first settlers. Others are books of spells used by sorcerers, histories of Etheria I commissioned during my reign as Queen, and other assorted materials I like to read for fun."

Turning to Steven and Connie, she handed Connie one thick diary, titled The tale of Rainbow Quartz and Pink Diamond. "I've tried to understand what this book means, but from all the Etherian history I know, I've never heard of these names before. Perhaps you can figure out what it means since you call yourselves gems and the people in this book are a bit like all of you."

She paused and continued. "Just remember to bring it back within a week, because it's one of my most prized possessions."

Connie responded radiantly and politely. "Can do, ma'am!"

With the tour coming to an end, Angella led them to their quarters, an extra room in the castle where they were to sleep. As she walked away, Connie, Steven, Garnet, and Lapis ran to the rooms of Glimmer and Adora, finding Amethyst, Peri, and Pearl. What happened next was unexpected, even for the Gems. Perhaps the gems wanted to get to know their new friends, or maybe Adora, Glimmer, and Bow felt similarly about these new visitors. Whatever the reason, a slumber party came about. Adora, Glimmer, Bow, Peri, Amethyst, Pearl, Steven, Connie, Lapis, and Garnet all slept in the same place: Adora's room.

While they were not sleeping together in one bed, they were huddled in different parts of the room. While the Crystal Gems hoped that the next day would allow them to relax in this strange new land, where they had met some of the nicest people, Adora, Glimmer, and Bow had similar hopes. They wanted to learn more about these visitors, who were almost like extraterrestrial invaders from outer space to them. As they drifted into deeper and deeper sleep, with Lapis snoring like she usually did, Pearl's projecting her dream across the room, which no one saw it because they were fast asleep. It showed her teaching Adora improved sword fighting skills and awarding what she called "Pearl Points" for her progress so far. This indicated that their bond of friendship had strengthened.

End Notes

I can't thank the Steven Universe fandom site enough for information on Lion, Garnet, Amethyst, Pearl, Steven, Stevonnie, Peridot, and Lapis, as it was vital to this story, the same being said about the pages on the She-Ra fandom site about The Princess Alliance, The Moonstone, Queen Angella, and Adora. The "Panama Wormhole" is a term which originally came about in the season 7 episode of Futurama ("Rebirth"), named by Prof. Farnsworth, and I have appropriated it to use it in this story. I didn't go character descriptions of the She-Ra characters because I have done them in past stories (specifically of Bow, Glimmer, Adora, Queen Angella, Light Hope, George, and Lance) and it would be unnecessary to do it for everyone in this story. The mention of Pearl Points comes from the Season 3, episode 9 episode of Steven Universe, "Sworn to the Sword." Also, the mention of the Buddy Buddwick Library refers to the Season 4, episode 3 episode, "Buddy's Book."
